Later the same day, another tank of his platoon was set afire by enemy rocket fire and, again under enemy fire, he assisted in evacuating the five-man crew; despite the danger of imminent explosion. Sergeant Yorkshire was mortally wounded in action the following day. His intrepidity reflects high credit upon his character as a soldier. Entered military service from Maryland.

When a tank of his command was immobilized during an attack, Lieutenant Ballard ordered two other tanks into position, designated their targets, then left his own tank and made his way across open ground in the face of heavy enemy fire to the disabled tank. Mounting the turret, he loaded, adjusted and fired the 76mm weapon, destroying an enemy antitank position and silencing a machine gun nest. Lieutenant Ballard's gallant and daring actions contributed materially to the success of the unit operation. Entered military service from Kansas.

First Lieutenant David H Sudderth, 01327679, Infantry, United States Army, for gallantry in action in the vicinity of * * * and * * *, Germany on 8 March 1945. Lieutenant Sudderth led his platoon in an attack against stubborn enemy defenses between * * * and * * *. When his unit was pinned down by heavy enemy fire, Lieutenant Sudderth moved among his troops, reorganized them under fire, then personally led a supporting squad in a flanking movement to place heavy fire on the enemy positions, thereby enabling leading elements of his platoon to advance and seize enemy weapons that were hampering the advance. While consolidating newly won ground, he noticed two soldiers lying wounded ahead of our lines. Without hesitation he went to their side, administered first aid, and personally evacuated one of them to a place of safety.
