First Lieutenant Eugene A Kay, 01323934, Infantry, United States Army, for gallantry in action in the * * * sector, Normandy, France, on 17 July 1944. When his battalion was pinned down by heavy enemy machine gun fire, Lieutenant Kay, a platoon leader, crawled well forward, located the enemy positions and directed artillery fire on them, enabling the battalion to resume its advance a distance of some 3500 yards to the division objective. Lieutenant Kay's platoon was one of the first to reach the objective. While reconnoitering ahead of the new positions, he was killed by an enemy sniper. Lieutenant Kay's courage, leadership and zealous devotion to duty reflect the highest credit upon his character as an officer and upon the military service. Entered military service from Missouri.

Staff Sergeant Raymond D Hoyt, 37070562, Infantry, United States Army, for gallantry in action in the * * * sector, Normandy, France, 17 July 1944. Sergeant Hoyt reorganized a platoon of his company and placed it to cover with fire a three-story building on the top floor of which he had discovered an enemy machine gun. He then organized a two-man patrol, one a senior scout, the other a rifle grenadier, with which to flank the building. The patrol destroyed the enemy gun with rifle grenades and captured two of its crew. Having ordered the grenadier to return to the unit with the prisoners, Sergeant Hoyt and the senior scout continued their advance until he was killed by fire from a hidden enemy machine gun. The leadership, courage and devotion to duty on the part of Sergeant Hoyt are in accord with the highest traditions of the military service. Entered military service from Kansas.

Sergeant Lyle E Oyler, 37070822, Infantry, United States Army, for gallantry in action in the * * * sector, Normandy, France, on 11 July 1944. When the advance of his company was held up by well fortified and strongly defended enemy positions, Sergeant Oyler, a mortar squad leader, set up his weapons and, despite heavy fire from the enemy gun emplacements, succeeded in destroying three enemy machine gun positions by direct hits before he was killed by enemy action while directing fire of his mortars from an exposed observation position. The gallant actions of Sergeant Oyler, his tenacity of purpose and disregard for personal safety, are in accord with the military traditions of the United States. Entered military service from Kansas.

Private First Class Donald A Hansen, 36423201, Infantry, United States Army, for gallantry in action in the * * * sector, Normandy, France, 17 July 1944. In the operation against * * *, when his platoon had been reorganized and placed in a holding position to deliver fire upon an enemy machine gun on the top floor of a three-story building, Private Hansen, with two other enlisted men, one a squad sergeant, the other a rifle grenadier, formed a patrol for the purpose of flanking the building. The patrol fired rifle grenades into the building, destroying the enemy gun and then capturing two of its crew. Private Hansen, a senior scout, then continued to advance with the squad sergeant, but was killed by fire from a hidden enemy machine gun. Private Hansen's gallantry in action, his courage and devotion to duty are in accord with the highest military traditions. Entered military service from Michigan.

and killed or wounded ten of the enemy and routed the remainder. He then crept to his original objective and destroyed the enemy machine gun with hand grenades. While crawling back to his platoon, Private Kleine, was killed by enemy fire. The intrepid action of Private Kleine, his gallantry in action and devotion to duty are in accord with the highest military traditions. Entered military service from Ohio.

In the operation against * * *, Lieutenant Krider went forward to observe and direct fire for a mortar section. While exposed to enemy fire, he directed the fire of the mortar section, as a result of which an enemy machine gun emplacement was destroyed. He then took an exposed position upon a road, continuing his fire direction, during which period he fired upon and killed eight of the enemy with his carbine, pinning down the remainder of an enemy group until it was destroyed by mortar fire. The gallantry in action of Lieutenant Krider, his technical skill, his disregard for personal safety and his devotion to duty, reflect credit upon his character as an officer and upon the military service. Entered military service from Michigan.

First Lieutenant Glen Mooney, 01307057, Infantry, United States Army, for gallantry in action in the * * * sector, Normandy, France, on 15 July 1944. Lieutenant Mooney successfully led his platoon by a covered route to a point opposite the rear of an enemy strong point, then along a hedgerow to a vantage point from which he launched an attack. With the issue still in doubt, he crawled into an exposed position ahead of his platoon and, when his carbine jammed, threw grenades into enemy fox holes and an enemy machine gun position, killing a number of the enemy and silencing the machine gun, and capturing seven Germans. The gallant actions of Lieutenant Mooney, his intrepid, dynamic leadership, and utter disregard for personal safety, were directly responsible for the reduction of an enemy strong point. Entered military service from Missouri.

When an enemy machine gun pinned down his company and a section of an adjoining unit, Sergeant Cox and another enlisted man voluntarily undertook to envelop the enemy position with a machine gun. During his endeavor to destroy the enemy gun, he discovered a nearby farmhouse to be occupied by the enemy, directed his fire upon the dwelling and killed or wounded ten of the enemy and routed the remainder. He then crept to his original objective and destroyed the enemy machine gun with hand grenades. When the advance of his platoon was held up by withering fire from an enemy machine gun, Private Andring, a rifleman, crawled within eight feet of the enemy emplacement, threw a hand grenade into the enemy position, killing all members of the crew and silencing the machine gun. The gallant actions of Private Andring, his initiative and utter disregard for personal safety reflect the highest credit upon his character as a soldier and are in accord with the traditions of the Army.
