The first of these was the completion of the work on the report of the Commission on the Organization of the Army, which was submitted to the President in January, 1900. This report was a landmark document, and its recommendations have been the basis of many of the reforms which have since been adopted. The second important event was the completion of the work on the report of the Commission on the Organization of the War Department, which was submitted to the President in March, 1900. This report was also a landmark document, and its recommendations have been the basis of many of the reforms which have since been adopted. The third important event was the completion of the work on the report of the Commission on the Organization of the Army, which was submitted to the President in May, 1900. This report was also a landmark document, and its recommendations have been the basis of many of the reforms which have since been adopted.
